The subject of illegal occupation of housing property is one of growing concern. The phenomenon has in fact seen a significant increase in the past years and this especially in some countries, such as Spain where there is an important increase of official complaints against the illegal occupation of properties presented to the competent national authorities, with particular concerns related to second homes.

While the matter does not fall under direct EU competency, Spain and other European countries are now looking for new and more efficient ways forward to deal with this issue. This workshop intends on providing a platform to study national cases, exchange experiences and best practices which may provide useful insights for dealing with this complex matter.
